PRENTICE, HENDERSON, & OSBORYE WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1866 Chief Justice Chase, in taking the chair at a meeting of the Freedmen's Union Commission in Philadelphia the other night, made a short speech, in the

conrse of which he said:

If those communities who have been in rebellion against the government have anything to propose—if they think there is a better mode, a more generous mode, letter calculated to secure the peace and harmony and prosperity of this great land—let them come forward and propose it, and the people will listen and judge. In this country it is, thank God, the people who listen and judge every proposition which is submitted. [Applause I hope for the best. I know what a nation of passion and prejudice is, it is visions. conrse of which he said: of passion and prejudice is, it is villent and unreasonable, but it is transient—it speedly passes away.

Chief Justice Chase, who is high in the confidence of the radical party as well as high in place, here invites the South to come forward and propose a plan of reconcil ation. This invitation is sign ficant. It signifies that the radical leaders, com prehending their own inability by lawful means to break up the present dead-lock, will consider a counter-project from the South, rather than precipitately enter npon a revolutionary conrae The nvitation is encouraging It is full of prom-

And thus will the South most effectually improve it. We trust indeed that the Presi dent in his message will recomm and this course to the South: but, whether he does or not, we trust the South will pursue it. Apart rom total inactivity, no other honorable course, so far as we can see, is practicable, and total inactivity is wise only whilst activity threatens to be useless or mischievous. So far as activity promuses to be salutary inactivity ceases to be masterly. The course in question is practica le as well as honoral le, and it promtses to be salutary. Clearly this If the South will not accept restoration on the terms offered through the const tucional amendment, restorati n ought to be forced upon them in some other way by Congress. This seems to us the only al-ternative. The interests of the North—of be whole country—yes, the interests of he South as well as the North—demand a. It is folly to talk of the rights of the Southern States. We are in a quasi state of war, the war is not closed np while these States remain unrestored, and they are completely under the power and at the mercy of the North. The will of the Northarn paonle, and consequently of papers so able and respectable as the thred near Franklin was cleven, and, in stead of their having all been "Federal mercy of the North. The will of the Northern people, and consequently of Congress, as representing the Northern people, as the absolute law in the case. All appeals to former constitutional rights are use ess, if even a strict technical interpretation of the Constitution might seem to favor them because the tacky . as the Chronicle implies, only two rection will seriously interfere with the gratification of which our respected conseem to favor them, because the war power—the power of the conquerer over the conquered—is superior to everything else. Under all the circumstances we conclude, therefore, that it is best for Conpress, as soon as it shall assemble, to legislate for the entire and complete reconstruction of the Southern States.
